When a number, including a number with a fraction, is used as a quantifier, it is not hyphenated (e.g., two and half years). If the number is used as a compound adjective or noun, then hyphens should be used (e.g., two-and-a-half-year journey). When writing fractions, hyphenate between the numerator and the denominator (e.g., two-thirds, three-fifths).

I was once pulled over, I just had two beers in a half hour after work. I wasn't worried so I blew a test and it registered .008. Damn! They took me to the barracks. I was silently burping the whole time. I blew into the machine that they record you with for the court record. It blew a .006. It was eventually thrown out in court.
