When a heart contracts and forces blood into the blood vessels, there is a certain path that the blood follows through the human body. The blood moves through pulmonary circulation and then continues on through systemic circulation. Pulmonary and systemic are the two circuits in the two-circuit system of higher animals with closed

The path of blood
through the heart
begins with the right
atrium receiving blood,
which has circulated
through most of the body. This blood is relatively low in
oxygen because most of it has already been delivered to different
organs and tissues.
